

12. Orriols park

The Orriols garden or Orriols municipal park covers an area of 43.977 m². It was opened in September 2000, fulfilling a long-cherished wish of the local residents.

It is in the new area of Orriols, in the San Lorenzo neighbourhood, facing the Estadi Ciutat de València and has become the neighbourhood's green lung, leisure and recreation area.

This quadrangular public park has entrances through the four streets around it: Beata Genoveva Torres street, Arquitecto Tolsá street, San Vicente de Paul street and Santiago Rusiñol street.

It has a classic design. From the entrances you will reach the heart of the park in a straight line, where there is a rectangular pond with a circular pergola with 6 columns supporting a dome covered with blue trencadís.

It has a sports complex with a municipal swimming pool and facilities for swimming, tennis, paddle tennis and other sports.

Facing the sports area, there is a children's play area.

The garden has a large rose garden, a pond and fountains. Notable trees in the park include sycamore trees, London plane trees, white mulberry trees, cypresses, rosewoods, Japanese cherry trees and pines, among others.

It is the only park in the city of València, where we can still find the "parotet", a native species of dragonfly. In order to conserve this species, no insecticide is used and it is watched over and protected by the neighborhood association of the Orriols-Rascanya.

An extension is planned to incorporate urban vegetable gardens in the area.

How to get there on foot?

Santiago Rusiñol street contains one of the entrances to Orriols Park, facing the Estadi Ciutat de València.
